P: Programmist's arguments

T: Tester's arguments

P: User goes to this website to read an article, not for to use menu associated mainly with the shop.

T: OK, but we can make the user browse this website with pleasure and without irritation.

P: This website is minimalistic and esthetic. I don't see any problem.

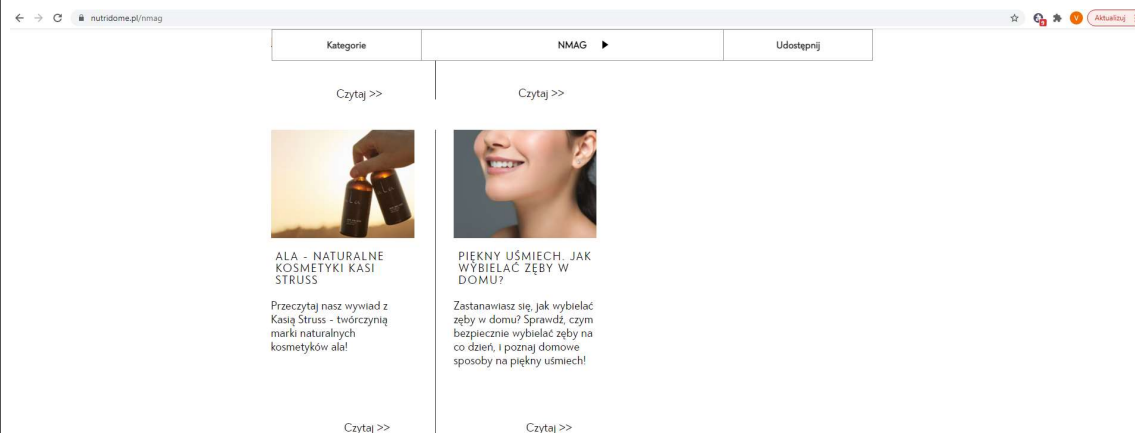

T: Please, look here. These two columns contain a lot of articles. Scrolling them requires too much time.

P: Maybe yes, but shop owners want to user will read all articles.

T: I understand. Maybe we can use methods to make the website much friendly? I propose additional buttons, e.g. "next page", "previous page"?

P: A website designer established with the product owner that all articles must be on one page.

T: Really? I think that I know a solution. Look at this:

P: OMG, who designed it?

T: It's irrelevant. Maybe you can change the page layout to 4 columns? Now, we have 60% free space and I have the impression that it looks like something is missing from the website.

P: You're right. OK, I can change it. But what with the menu? A user still must scroll articles to the end.

T: Look: it is „page up” I think that maybe you can add button „page down”. What do you think about it?
